++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Sunny spells for most but still some night frost.

Today:
The odd early fog patch but many areas starting sunny before patchy cloud develops, especially towards the west. A chilly start again but turning out a little warmer than recently by afternoon, and feeling pleasant away from some eastern coasts.

Tonight:
Cloud thickening to bring some light rain to Northern Ireland and western Scotland. Otherwise clear spells leading to another frost for many areas, and the odd patch of fog.

Sunday:
Northern Ireland and parts of Scotland cloudy with patchy light rain and drizzle. Otherwise another day of sunny spells and patchy cloud, temperatures recovering well by the afternoon.

Outlook for Monday to Wednesday:
Continuing mostly dry with rain affecting the extreme northwest dying away as it moves southeast on Tuesday. Daytime temperatures close to average in any sunshine, but still some cold nights.
